KURZ-KASCH ACQUIRES THE ASSETS OF MACLEAN MOLDED FROM MACLEAN VEHICLE SYSTEMS

-- Adds Complementary Products to the Kurz-Kasch Portfolio,
Creates a Platform for Expansion into the Automotive Sector --

DAYTON, Ohio – September 19, 2007 – Kurz-Kasch, Inc., a worldwide leader in the design and manufacture of electromagnetic and engineered composite components, today announced that it has acquired the assets of MacLean Molded Components, LLC from MacLean Vehicle Systems, LLC (“MVS”), an affiliate of privately owned MacLean-Fogg Company. Terms of the transaction were not disclosed.

Kurz-Kasch is a portfolio company of Monomoy Capital Partners, L.P., the New York private equity firm.

MacLean Molded is a leading manufacturer of highly-engineered thermoset and thermoplastic components for use in automobiles and light trucks. Kurz-Kasch will acquire all of the thermoset assets of MacLean Molded, including its substantial thermoset production contracts with car makers and Tier 1 automotive suppliers. The MacLean operations will be consolidated into Kurz-Kasch’s existing manufacturing facility in Wilmington, Ohio. Former MVS plant manager Scott Henricks has joined Kurz-Kasch and will direct the transition of MacLean production to Kurz-Kasch.

“MacLean Molded’s thermoset products and production contracts are important additions to our growing engineering and manufacturing expertise,” said George Kochanowski, chief executive officer of Kurz-Kasch. “The acquisition of MacLean customer relationships, and the establishment of TS certification in our Wilmington facility, firmly establishes Kurz-Kasch as a preferred supplier of engineered composite components for under-the-hood applications in the automotive industry.”
